

“Filled with Sweet”

How many times has your soul been filled with the Spirit of God—perhaps even to overflowing—as you have sung, played, or pondered on a sacred hymn? If you are like me, those experiences may be too frequent to count. Recently, my mind has turned again and again to these words, penned by Mormon Apostle Orson F. Whitney:

Savior, Redeemer of my soul,
Whose mighty hand hath made me whole,
Whose wondrous pow'r hath raised me up
And filled with sweet my bitter cup!
What tongue my gratitude can tell,
O gracious God of Israel.

I love Elder Whitney’s use of the word “sweet” as a noun rather than an adjective, and the idea that the Savior has power to fill my bitter—or empty—cup with this wondrous thing called “sweet.”

This truth is reflected in an Old Testament story that teaches essentially the same lesson. In 2 Kings chapter 4, we read about a woman in deep distress who approaches the prophet Elisha for help. She describes her bitter situation—her emptiness—in these words: “Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.” We are not told how her righteous husband died, or what kind of debt they were in when he passed away. All we know is that her sons are about to be taken from her as slaves to her creditor if she cannot come up with sufficient payment.

Elisha asks the woman, “What shall I do for thee? Tell me, what hast thou in the house?” She replies that her cupboards are bare—she has nothing in the house except a small container of oil. Elisha assures the woman that if she has even a little oil, she has plenty. He tells her to gather all of her empty containers into one place. “Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbors, even empty vessels; borrow not a few. And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.”

“So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the [empty] vessels to her; and she poured out,” filling each vessel with oil from her small container. One after another, each vessel was filled with oil and then set aside. Truly, the multiplying of this oil was a miracle! “And it came to pass, when the vessels were [all] full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more.” Only at that point—when all the empty vessels were filled—the record indicates, “the oil stayed,” or stopped.

“Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.”

What miraculous oil, indeed! What is this oil that has power to fill every emptiness one can find; oil that—even if one possesses only a little—seems to multiply as though it were infinite; oil that not only can pay one’s debts, but can help one to live from day to day?

It should not be surprising that we continue to use oil today in several of the ordinances of the Church. The symbol of oil—especially olive oil—points our minds back to that singular event which took place on the Mount of Olives in a garden (or rather, today we would call it an orchard) of olive trees, known as Gethsemane, meaning “the place where the oil is pressed.” In addition to the olive trees growing there, this particular garden was home to an oil press—a large stone vat where harvested olives would be gathered and then crushed under the weight of a second enormous stone, causing the bruised and broken olives to release their precious and necessary oil. This oil was used by the people as fuel in their lamps to provide light in hours of darkness, and as a source of nourishment in preparing their food.

But the real miracle at the Mount of Olives occurred when Jesus Christ, the true source of light and life, chose Gethsemane as the place where He—like a great Olive with a capital O—would be pressed under the crushing weight of the sum total of the sins, pains, sicknesses, trials, and afflictions of all who had ever lived or would yet live. When He was “bruised, broken, torn for us” there at Gethsemane, what came out of Him? Blood. Atoning blood that has the power to fill emptiness. Blood that provides light in hours of darkness. Blood that becomes a source of life and nourishment to all who will partake of it.

So, let’s return to Elisha and the woman in 2 Kings. The woman had a little oil, which was enough in her darkest moment. Enough to pay her debts. Enough to provide life from day to day. Enough to fill not only the woman’s own emptiness, but the emptiness of all of her neighbors. All she had to do was pour it out.

What does all of this have to do with you playing the organ, you might ask? That’s a good question. I’ll ask this question again: How many times has your soul been filled with the Spirit of God—perhaps even to overflowing—as you have sung, played, or pondered on a sacred hymn? We need those experiences with the Spirit. The Holy Ghost is the messenger of the Father and the Son, and is the Agent of the Atonement. That is, it is His job to deliver the blessings of the Atonement—which are spiritual in nature—to those who need to be filled.

Sacred music is an essential element of our worship, and is one of the best tools to invite the Holy Ghost to fill our souls with the oil of the Atonement. Some sixty years ago, the Apostle Adam S. Bennion taught: “In the Church we need better music and more of it, and better speaking and less of it” (see Sterling W. Sill, Leadership, vol. 3 [Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1978], p. 288). Why would he say such a thing? Does sacred music have the potential to invite the Spirit of the Lord more readily than preaching the spoken word?

Felix Mendelssohn suggested: “[Words] seem to me so ambiguous, so vague, so easily misunderstood in comparison to genuine music, which fills the soul with a thousand things better than words.”

Things better than words? The First Presidency, in the preface to our current hymnbook, taught: “Hymns can lift our spirits, give us courage, and move us to righteous action. They can fill our souls with heavenly thoughts and bring us a spirit of peace.” And Paul taught the Ephesians that by worshiping “in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord,” they would “be filled with the Spirit.” (Ephesians 5:18–20)

I believe the spoken word also has the potential to invite the Spirit—but perhaps not as easily or readily as when combined with sacred music. Sometimes we can view the Word of God as harsh or overly demanding, and so we build stony walls around our tender hearts to protect us from feeling overwhelmed. However, when joined with worthy music, the Word seems to find its way through the tiny cracks in those walls and touches us in more gentle, healing ways.

You have undoubtedly experienced those feelings of the Spirit through music, time and time again. You know what it is like to have your own emptiness filled by the oil of the Atonement as you worship through sacred song. But as musicians in the Church, you have an additional opportunity to fill your neighbors’ empty vessels as well.

President Boyd K. Packer taught, “Those who choose, conduct, present, and accompany the music may influence the spirit of reverence in our meetings more than a speaker does. . . . An organist who has the sensitivity to quietly play prelude music from the hymnbook tempers our feelings and causes us to go over in our minds the lyrics which teach the peaceable things of the kingdom. If we will listen, they are teaching the gospel, for the hymns of the Restoration are, in fact, a course in doctrine!” (Ensign, Nov. 1991, 22)

As you attend the Organ Workshop this week, will you please ponder the following question? If my own soul has been filled through worthy music, how can I use my musical gifts to now pour out the healing oil I have so enjoyed to fill the emptiness of my neighbors all around me?

In our most recent General Conference, Young Men General President Stephen W. Owen taught us: “It is not enough for us . . . just to come unto Christ; our duty . . . is to ‘invite all to come unto Christ.’ We cannot be satisfied receiving spiritual blessings for ourselves; we must lead the people we love to those same blessings.”

I believe that that should increasingly be our motivation for developing our talents. “Because I have been given much, I too must give”—or perhaps we might say “Because my emptiness has been filled by the Spirit that accompanies sacred music, I too must use my gifts to fill the emptiness of others.” I hope that’s why you are here.

I would like to turn some time over to Sister Diane Bastian, who has for the last twenty years sought to use her musical gifts to “pour out” on behalf of others as she has served on and overseen the General Music Committee that blesses the worldwide Church. Sister Bastian will tell us a little about how many senior missionary couples throughout the world are using music to help fill the emptiness they find in the neighborhoods in which they are serving.

* * * * *

Brothers and Sisters, it is our opportunity to invite others to be filled by the oil of the Atonement of Jesus Christ—and to do this using our musical gifts. Once more, I quote from our Young Men General President, Stephen W. Owen. He said:

The more earnestly you come unto Christ, the more deeply you will desire to help others experience what you have experienced. Another word for this feeling is charity, “which [the Father] hath bestowed upon all who are true followers of his Son, Jesus Christ.” Then you will find that in the very act of following Christ, you are also leading others to Him, for in the words of President Thomas S. Monson, “As we follow that Man of Galilee—even the Lord Jesus Christ—our personal influence will be felt for good wherever we are, whatever our callings.”

I testify that the Atonement of Jesus Christ, like the widow’s oil in Elisha’s day, has the power to fill our souls, taking away our emptiness and replacing bitter with sweet. Not only that, it has the power to fill the emptiness so prevalent in the world around us. May we each use our gifts to invite all to come unto Christ and find healing and wholeness in Him, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.
